ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE MEETING.

AT THE annual town meeting holden March 3, 1903, it was voted to observe the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the town of New Salem as a district; in connection with the annual reunion of the alumni of New Salem Academy, on the third Thursday of August following. The sum of one hundred and fifty dollars was appropriated for the expenses of the occasion, and a committee of seven was appointed to act in connection with the regular Academy reunion committee. The following were appointed viz: Daniel Ballard, Eugene Bullard, Albert Ballard, Edwin F. Stowell, Lyman E. Moore, Willard Putnam, Mrs. B. F. Fay.

The reunion committee consisted of the following viz: Mrs. Charles Aborn, Geo. Fisher, Miss Eliza Merriam, Frank Cogswell, Miss Luna Pierce, Fred Whipple, William Bullard, Mrs. R. K. Seig.

At a meeting of the joint committees Eugene Bullard was chosen chairman and Edwin F. Stowell secretary and treasurer.

The meeting was held as arranged on the 20th of August. Although the day opened with a heavy rain storm there were present during the day eight hundred people, many coming from distant places to see once more the scenes of their early life.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME

BY FAYETTE W. WHEELER.

It is with many pleasant emotions that I look back upon the years of my boyhood spent here among you. I remember so well walking to church on Sundays, of the friendly greetings, of sitting in the family pew, and listening to the grand old anthems sung by the clear, strong voices of our choir, and how much I enjoyed that music. Mrs. Charles Chandler presided at the organ, while Mr. Gill, and later Porter Eaton, were the leaders of the choir. Some of the singers' voices are now hushed forever, but the songs they sung still live in my memory. I love to think of our old pastor, Rev. David Eastman, and family. He was a minister of the old school, refined and courteous, preaching with devoted fervor the gospel of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Then after the morning service came the Sunday school, of which Deacon Poole, was superintendent for many years. We had few of the modern Sunday school methods in that school, but the lessons taught there have, I am sure, exerted a most salutary influence over many boys and girls in their after lives.

I recall most vividly my first day at yonder academy, my meeting with Prof. Stratton, the principal, and my first impression of academic life. I love to think of the lyceum, and of those who took part in the debates on those momentous questions, many of which originated in the fertile brains of our committee. The social gatherings, the musicals and literary entertainments, the May holiday in the woods, when we gathered the sweet-scented arbutus, the autumnal field-day. All these form many pleasant pictures for memory to dwell upon. The recollections of these pleasant scenes and associations are very dear to me, and, in the years since spent in the busy life of the city, they oftentimes seem to me as the shaded side of the hot and dusty way of life, or as the grasp of a warm, friendly hand in a far away land.

We have assembled on this occasion to celebrate in an appropriate manner the 150th anniversary of the founding of the town of New Salem. It was an important event 150 years ago, and we do well to thus honor the sturdy line of patriotic citizens who founded and maintained its institutions.

In order to comprehend the full significance of this hour, and understand the impelling force of circumstances which rendered this celebration possible, we must consider the pious and liberty-loving ancestry from which we sprang, and turn back to that never-to-be-forgotten December day when a band of God-fearing men and women moored their frail bark on the wild New England shore.

Welcome back to New Salem, to its academy, and all the old associations which cluster about this beautiful spot. New Salem has ever been noted from the earliest days for her generous hospitality. She has never yet been weighed in the balance and found wanting, and I feel certain that on this occasion her citizens will maintain her well-merited reputation.

Once more all roads lead to New Salem, the latch-string is out, and again I extended to you all a most cordial welcome.

At the morning session the church was comfortably filled, while in the afternoon there was not a vacant seat to be found, and it was necessary to bring in chairs to accommodate the crowd.

Both the outside of the church and academy bore tasteful decorations of red, white and blue streamers, and interwoven at the top with neat effect. The interior of the church was attired in anniversary gown. It has recently been repainted in a fresh and pleasing tint. A new stage has been erected, which adds much to the convenience of the edifice. The front of the stage was banked with goldenrod, and these simple decorations were in fine harmony with the recently renovated building.

Another interesting feature, which was much appreciated by the many visitors, was several stone slabs, properly marked, showing old landmarks. They are a permanent thing and as years go by will be more and more interesting. The site of the first church, near the present one, was one of the places marked, as well as the site of the old fort almost opposite the academy, "erected by the early settlers in defence against Indian hostilities in 1740."

The large collection of antiques and relics in the Academy was visited by a large number throughout the day. This exhibition was in charge of Chas. P. Johnson, and was one of the most creditable ever seen in this section. There were multitudes of interesting things, averaging in age from 50 to over 200 years. It is wonderful what an assortment could be gathered together, and the interest manifested in it was clearly shown by the crowded condition of the room throughout the entire day. Elsewhere we give a partial list of the collection.

A most enjoyed portion of the day was the really fine music by the New Salem band which gave two concerts, from 9 to 10, and from 4 to 5, as well as selections in the hall both morning and afternoon. The work was very creditable indeed and the musicians received hearty applause for their music. The two concerts rendered were as follows:

MORNING.

March,	"Tenth Regiment"	R. B. Hall
Overture,	"L'Emotion"	Bosquier
Waltzes,	"Gerbelle"	Ripley
March,		Selected
Medley of War Songs,		Arr. by Dalbey
Finale,	"The Jolly Coasters,"	Munnell

AFTERNOON.

March,	"A Buffalo Review"	Munnell
Overture,	"Narragansett"	Dalbey
Trombone Solo,		Selected
	Mr. Arthur Martfn.
Waltzes,	"Venetian Nights"	Maresh
March, Characteristic,	"Alagazam"	Holzmann
Popular Medley,	"Something Doing"	Mackie-Beyer
Finale.

Anniversary badges were in great demand. They were of neat design and will serve as pleasant reminders of the day and event.

It is interesting to note that the first reunion of the Academy was held 29 years ago last Thursday to a day, and there were a number present who were at this reunion.

Mrs. R. K. Sieg was in her accustomed place near the south entrance with the bundle of Reunion Banners and the registration book. The Banner this year was of unusual interest and its pages were eagerly scanned. Mrs. Sieg was heartily complimented on the splendid success of this number. It has scarcely ever been equalled.

Ernest H. Vaughan of Worcester made an ideal presiding officer. He was full of life and vigor and his introduction of speakers and his pleasant way of making announcements met with much favor. Mr. Vaughan as president has been a hard worker, despite his busy law duties in Worcester and his re-election was a deserved tribute to good and effective work. Mr. Vaughan stated at the anniversary that he could not under any circumstances accept a re-election, as he should probably be out of the country next August, but the election stood and probably if Mr. Vaughan cannot be present the vice-president, Henry P. Billings of Hardwick will take charge.

PRESIDENT VAUGHAN'S WELCOME

In opening the afternoon exercises, President Vaughan said that there were always many disappointments in life and the day's program was not without them. He spoke feelingly of the absence of Congressman Gillett and of his recent accident. Mr. Vaughan then introduced Councillor Richard W. Irwin of Northampton, who delivered the oration of the day. Mr. Irwin proved to be a delightful speaker, intermingling humor and lofty references to New England character, and showing his versatility in many ways throughout the address. He said he brought congratulations direct from Gov. Bates who, had not another engagement interfered, would have been present at the anniversary. Mr. Irwin humorously spoke of his college classmate, E. H. Vaughan, and said he had always understood that New Salem was a very healthy place, that none but visitors ever died, and he sincerely hoped he would not be numbered among the missing at the close of the day's exercises. The American, said the speaker, is a composite of all nations; he came from no one individually. The freedom and blessings we are now enjoying came to us through hardships and privations suffered by our forefathers. Right here in New Salem the early settlers endured much, the fruits of which the present day residents are enjoying. The public mind is influenced by argument slowly, by event quickly. It was the event of the Boston massacre that influenced the public mind, already aflame, to a higher and more decisive degree. Mr. Irwin spoke of the events which liberated the English speaking people, and of the Puritan fathers and their hardships and sufferings. The free schools and free church were both preceded by the free ballot. The Puritan contained the germs of our national greatness. New Salem is not like a hill of potatoes, "the best part under the ground," for there are many active, energetic people here and it is well shown by this celebration. There were small beginnings and big results.

There is nothing in the history of the world equal to the results of what the Puritans did many years ago. Mr. Irwin told of the many acts of loyalty which occurred in Massachusetts in early days, and of her record along patriotic lines. Education has been the anchor to the windward through its long history. The speaker told of the benefits of academic life and the good it had done to multitudes of young men and women. He interspersed his remarks throughout with spicy anecdotes and pleasant stories, and was heartily applauded at the close.

HISTORICAL ADDRESS

BY EUGENE BULLARD.

Concerning the history of the territory occupied by the town of New Salem, previous to its occupation by the white man, we know but little, and to that little nothing more will ever be added. We know that these hills and valleys have existed from the earliest periods of time. We know that the waters of these rivers and brooks, have ever been flowing toward the ocean. We know that this whole region for a hundred years after the landing of the pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, was an unbroken forest, an unexplored wilderness. Its hills and valleys were covered with a heavy growth of tall pines, mammoth hemlocks, chestnut, oak, birch and ash. And in these primeval forests was the home of the bear, the panther and the wolf. And on these grassy meadows, along the streams, was the feeding places of the deer and the moose. The wild turkey and the partridge was to be found everywhere. The pickerel and the trout were plenty in the ponds and brooks, and in the spring time the shad and the salmon came up from their home in the ocean and were abundant in all these streams.

The Indian had been in possession of this land for unnumbered generations. They were branches or clans of the Nipnets or Nipmuck, whose domain extended from Northfield on the north to Springfield on the south. They usually had no fixed place of habitation, there was no land in this vicinity upon which they raised corn; they remained only at one place while the game and fish were plenty. But there were two places upon our territory that were more prominently occupied; one was upon the bow between the Spectacle ponds near the village of South Athol and the other at a place called the Bears Den, near the village of North New Salem; the latter was the general camping-place of all the surrounding clans. Here on the northern cliff a hundred feet above the roaring waters of Swift river, in times of war, they met to celebrate their victories over their enemies, and when defeated it was here they hid away in the crevices of the rocks.

Tradition tells us, and it is confirmed by history, that King Philip in the summer of 1675, a few days previous to his attack upon old Deerfield was at the "Bears Den" for a day or two, and that he gathered around him upon the council ground the chiefs of all the neighboring clans, and warned them of the danger that was before them, and asked for their help in driving the white man back into the sea from whence he came. In the wars with the Indians previous to the settlement of our town, the white man had been victorious in all directions and the Indian had learned that he was his superior, and that he was here to stay; so when our first settler came, they made no resistance to his coming, but were ever ready to strike a blow upon the new comer, when it could be done without danger to himself. And while no battle took place with the Indians in our town and no lives were lost, the early settler was for several years obliged to be ready at all times to defend himself, his wife and his children. Tradition tells us that at the time of the settlement of our town, the number of Indians in this vicinity was much less than in previous times.

The township of New Salem was first granted to Joseph Andrews and others of Salem in 1729, but they did not meet the conditions required, and on December 31, 1734 the general court granted to Daniel Epes, Benjamin Brown and others living in Salem a grant for a township equal to six miles square, and later issued to them another grant of four thousand acres. On the 20th of August 1735 the proprietors effected an organization and located the township upon the territory now occupied by the town of New Salem. The tract as laid out was about ten miles long and 3 1-2 miles wide, and contained 30,060 acres. The additional tract was annexed to the northern end of the new township, making it thirteen miles in length. Later it was widened on the west by the annexation of a part of Shutesbury. It was shortened at the south end by the setting off of a tract to Prescott. In 1830 and 1836 large tracts were taken from the north and east parts and annexed to Athol and Orange.

The conditions imposed upon the settlers of the new township were as follows, viz: Sixty home lots were to be laid out in a defensible manner. One lot was for the home of the minister; one lot was for the support of the minister; one lot was for the benefit of schools. Each settler was to pay five lbs. for his lot, and give bond for twenty-five lbs., that he would within three years build a house seven foot stud and 18 feet square and have seven acres in grass or grain; and that within five years, they should settle a learned minister. Whoever failed to comply with these conditions forfeited his right. The land was surveyed and a plan of the township was made upon parchment. This parchment with many other papers relating to the early history of the town, were destroyed by fire in 1856. Thus most that we know concerning the first settlement our town comes down to us through the uncertain traditions of the past.

It was nearly three years before anyone could be induced to settle. They eventually obtained the promise of Jeremiah Meacham of Salem to make the first settlement; the proprietors agreeing to make him a present of 10 lbs. He came with his family in the spring of 1737 and located one mile north of the centre of the town upon the farm now occupied by Frank A.

Hatstat. He first built a log cabin and then commenced to prepare his land for cultivation. His cabin was located upon the spot now occupied by Mr. Hatstat's house. He was a brave man, and his wife was like unto him, brave. This family eventually consisted of six sons and three daughters. Five of these sons took an honorable part in the great struggle for independence. In Pequoig, ten miles to the northeast of him, were a few white settlers, but in all other directions he was twenty miles from neighbors. He was soon followed by other brave settlers. Amos Foster settled in the west part of the township, upon the land now occupied by Charles A. Merriam. Mr. Foster was three weeks in making the journey from Salem with an ox team, mostly through an unbroken wilderness. His great-grand-daughter, Mrs. Abby Giles Herrick, who is living near us, at an advanced age, is patiently awaiting the call of the Master.

Jeremiah Ballard settled one-fourth mile to the north of the centre; Benjamin Stacy located 2 1-2 miles to the south; Daniel Shaw settled near by him; Samuel King in the south-west; Samuel Pierce, Amos Putnam and James Cook came a year later. In the extreme north part of the township one of the first settlers was Jonathan Chase; he walked from Salem alone and brought upon his shoulder a bushel of rye and in his hand a heavy iron kettle, which contained the provisions for his journey. There after settlers came rapidly, nearly all of them coming from Salem and towns in that vicinity, and the wilderness here and there began to show garden spots, where our forefathers had cleared away the giants of the forest and caused the earth to bring forth its increase.

The first grist mill was built by James Cook in 1740 near the farm now owned by J. Wells Wheeler, two miles south of the centre; the original millstone is now lying in the stream near the spot where the mill was built. Before the building of this mill, all grain had to be carried on horse back to Hadley on the Connecticut river, a distance of sixteen miles; the course being known by marked trees at convenient distances.

In the year 1750 Jeremiah Ballard and Jeremiah Meacham were granted a license to erect a sawmill upon land belonging to the proprietors. This mill was built in the east part of the township, upon the middle branch of Swift river, near the locality called Buffalo.

The fear of the Indians, and the stories of trouble with them at Pequig and other places near by, caused much uneasiness among the settlers, and two forts were built, one upon the present town farm and the other near the Academy building, and the meeting house was so built that it could be used as a refuge in time of danger. The farmer carried to the field his trusty rifle, and ever kept it near him. And when they attended divine worship they went armed, for no one could tell when the Indian would come, and so amid many privations, hardships and discouragements they watched and worked, and like the children of Israel in their bondage they increased and thrived.

In August 1736 the proprietors voted to build a meetinghouse 45 ft. long, 35 ft. wide and 20 ft. stud, and each of the proprietors were assessed 3 lbs. to defray the cost of building. The house was built in 1739 but was not entirely finished for many years. There was a day of great rejoicing and festivity when the frame was raised. Among the items of the day's expenses, were sugar, rum, molasses, pork, beef, butter and cheese, men and horses from Hadley, 29 lbs. 13s. 5d. making about $150.00 of our money.

Many of the settlers from time to time went into the service of the province against the Indians. The settlement furnished 12 men for the expedition against Louisburg in 1745, and they all took part in the capture of the city.

On the third of March 1753 a petition was presented to the great and general court by Jeremiah Ballard and other residents, asking for an incorporation. While all other papers relating to this subject are on file in the Archives at the State house, this petition is missing. A remonstrance signed by seven of the proprietors was presented on the 22nd of March in which, while they do not object to the organization, they desire to correct certain statements made by the petitioners. The petitioners say that the proprietors have not finished the meeting house according to agreement; they reply, that the proprietors have paid to John Gannon, one of the petitioners, the money for the completion of the meeting house. The petitioners claim that the meetings of the proprietors have not been held in New Salem according to agreement; they answer, that they have always been willing to have them held in New Salem; the petitioners claim that suitable roads have not been built; they answer, that the proprietors have appropriated a suitable amount of money for the building of the roads, but the act of incorporation was passed on the 15th of June, and made public on the 25th day of June.

SECTION 1st. "That the township of New Salem with the additional grant made to the township, be and hereby made into a district by the name of New Salem, and the said district is invested with all the privileges, powers and immunities that towns in this province do and may enjoy, except that of sending a representative to the general assembly. And the inhabitants of said district shall have full power and right, from time to time, until further order of this court, to join with the town of Sunderland in the choice of a representative, and that said district shall pay their just part of the expense of a representative according to their proportionate part of the province tax and that the town of Sunderland as often as they shall call a meeting for the choice of a representative shall give notice to the clerk of said district, for the time and place of holding said meeting, to the end, that said district my join with them, and the clerk of said district shall set up in some public place a notification thereof accordingly.

SECTION 2ND. All of the lands shall be taxed one penny per acre, for the space of three years, and all the moneys thereby raised, shall be employed in finishing the meeting house, repairing the roads, and defraying other public charges.

SECTION 3RD. That Elieyar Porter, Esq., is hereby empowered to issue his warrant, directed to some principal inhabitant in said district, to meet at such time and place as he shall appoint, to choose all officers as they are allowed to choose, for the transaction of the affairs of said district."

The warrant of Esq. Porter, the original of which is in the Archives at the State House, reads as follows:

"To Capt. Jeremiah Ballard, you are therefore to will and require, in his majesties name, to give reasonable notice to all inhabitants of this district, that are qualified to vote in town and district meetings, that they assemble and meet together at the meeting grove, on the day of the 5th of July next at one of the clock in the afternoon, then and there to make choice of a moderator, and all such officers as towns and districts are allowed to choose, for the conducting of their affairs.

Given under my hand and seal, this 28th day of June 1753, in the twenty-seventh day of his majesty's reign,

ELIEYAR PORTER, Justice of the Peace."

The record of that meeting as well as all subsequent meetings for one hundred and three years were lost by fire.

George II was at that time King of England and the Lieut. Gov. of the province, who was appointed by the King, was Spencer Phipps. The central figure in the affairs of the township at this time appears to be Capt. Jeremiah Ballard, and I can count in this audience today, twenty of his descendants.

The population of the township at this time was about two hundred and fifty.

1765	375	1820	2145	1870	987
1776	910	1830	1889	1880	869
1790	1543	1840	1305	1890	856
1800	1949	1850	1253	1900	809
1810	2107	1860	957

While there has been some reduction in the population of our town, from causes which have made a reduction in all of the hill towns in our vicinity, our great decrease is owing to the annexation of our territory to other towns, had our territory remained the same, our population today would have been 3100 (thirty-one hundred.)

By a general act of the Legislature the district became a town August 23, 1775.

When the war of the Revolution came it found the men of New Salem ready. The news of the battle of Lexington flew throughout New England like wild-fire, the swift horseman with his red flag proclaimed it in every town and village. When the news of the battle reached New Salem the people were hastily assembled on the village green by the notes of alarm. every man came with his gun and other preparations for a short march. The militia of the town were then divided into two companies, one of which was commanded by Capt. Goodell; this company was paraded before much consultation had been had upon the proper steps to be taken, and while determination was expressed upon almost every countenance, the men stood silently leaning on their muskets, awaiting the movement of the spirit in their officers. The Capt. was supposed to be tinctured with toryism and his present indecision and backwardness were ample proof if not of his attachment to royalty, at least of his unfitness to lead a patriot band; some murmurs began to be heard, when the 1st Lieut. William Stacy, took off his hat and began to address them, he was a man of stout heart but of few words. Pulling his commission from his pocket he said "Fellow soldiers I don't know exactly how it is with the rest of you but for one, I will no longer serve a king who murders my own countrymen," and tearing the paper in a hundred pieces, he trod it under his foot. Sober as were the people by nature, they could not restrain a wild hurrah as he stepped forward and took his place in the ranks. Capt. Goodell made a feeble endeavor to restore order, but they heeded him as little as the winds. The company was summarily disbanded and a reorganization took place on the spot. The gallant Stacy was chosen captain, the company voted at once to march to the seat of war, which was done before the next night. Capt. Stacy served through the war and rose to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. He received from General Washington a present of a gold snuff box. Soon after the war he removed to the far west, and was killed by the Indians near Marietta, Ohio.

There is in the archives, in the State House at Boston, the names of about 142 men from New Salem who served in the war of the Revolution. Benjamin Haskell was at the battle of Bunker Hill. He was near Gen. Warren when he fell and assisted in carrying him from the field. Two of his grandsons are with us today.

Two boys from the north-east part of the town, James Winship and Henry Foster, stood behind Ethan Allen when with that big oath he demanded the surrender of old Ticonderoga. They followed him past the islands of Lake Champlain into the Richelieu River and up into the city of Montreal, where they met their terrible defeat. James Winship went into imprisonment with his brave leader. Henry Foster was fatally wounded, but managed to escape across the St. Lawrence river, with a few survivors of the expedition; he died in the night, and as the first rays of daylight were coming from the east they buried his body in the sand, without a word of prayer or benediction they left him alone in his glory.

Aaron Hager was at the battle of Bennington. Jesse Trask was at Stillwater and Saratoga. Jacob Tyrrell was at White Plains and Monmouth and Valley Forge. Lieut. Samuel Manning stood behind Washington at Yorktown. Capt. Jeremiah Ballard, son of the early settler of the same name, commanded a company composed of men from this and the surrounding towns. This company was for a time in the service in the northern country, the particulars of which we are unable to give.

Capt. Jacob Sampson commanded a company in the northern campaigns, and later represented the town in the General Court. His great grand-daughter, Mrs. R. K. Seig, has a prominent part in our exercises today. William Knight was at Bennington. Aaron Forbush was at Whiteplains and Valleyforge.

In October, 1777, one division of the Hessian prisoners, numbering 1000 men who were captured with Gen. Burgoyne, passed through the north part of the town on their journey from Greenfield to Petersham. Thomas Andrews gave to all these men a supply of apples from his orchard. These apples were of the very poorest quality, but they were very acceptable to the prisoners. Several of these men remained in this town and in Petersham, all of whom took unto themselves American wives, and today several of their descendants are numbered among the residents of this town. Some suitable point in their journey will be marked, so that this incident will be remembered by our descendants.

We who are living in our homes today, enjoying all the comforts of modern improvements, do not realize all the hardships and privations of our forefathers. For them it was a hard life, a life of unending toil. They had but few books; the newspaper was almost unknown.

Previous to the Declaration of Independence there were but two holidays in the year, Thanksgiving and Fast, which were observed in a most solemn and devout manner. For Christmas they had no use; they fully believed that the old province law was right, which imposed a fine, also imprisonment, for anyone who should make any observance of Christmas. Notwithstanding all the disadvantages surrounding them, they were the ancestors of a noble band of men and women, who made this town the leading town in the county, of men and women who went away to the north, to the east, to the south and to the west. And they and their descendants have done much toward moulding the institutions of our country. There are in the United States eleven post-offices named New Salem, all named for our town.

For a period of more than thirty years after the close of the Revolutionary War, this town gained rapidly in population and in business. The merchants were wide-awake, progressive men, and trade came from all surrounding towns. The farmers were intelligent, and cultivated their lands to good profit. All surplus products, such as pork, beef, poultry, butter and cheese, found a market in Boston, and when the farmer returned from market he brought with him his winter's supply of groceries. Some of the best lawyers and physicians of the state were located here. There were two tanneries in town, one near the centre, which was burned in 1853, and one at North New Salem, which continued in business till 1860. In days previous to railroads, a large amount of lumber and shingles were sent to Cobb's Landing on the Connecticut River, from whence a large part was sent to the West Indies.

Previous to 1812, New Salem was a part of Hampshire County, and the people of this town took an active part in the establishment of the new county. At that time the population was larger than any other town in the county.

Massachusetts was not in favor of the war of 1812, and Gov. Strong refused to call out any of the military companies of the state, except for the defence of the coast. A few men from this town enlisted into the regular army. Among them was Moses Pierce, who was at Plattsburg, and Leonard Curtis, who followed Gen. Scott in the campaign in Canada. He took part in the battles of Lundy's Lane and Chippeway. At Chippeway he lost a leg, and for many years received a suitable pension. To him I am indebted for much unwritten history of the war of 1812. On the afternoon of August 5th, 1813, a horseman came galloping into town with an order from Gov. Strong that a company of militia should be immediately sent to Boston, as the British had landed nearby, and were threatening the city. There were at that time in this town three military companies. It was immediately decided that the company of which Ebenezer Torry was captain should be sent. These men were mostly from the north and east parts of the town. James Day was fifer and Thomas Shaw was drummer of this company. During the night, the men composing the company were notified to appear at the store of William Whitaker, at 10 A. M., on the following day, armed and equipped as the law required, with three days' rations. The men were all there with the exception of four, whose places were immediately filled with volunteers. The company numbered 78 men. Captain Torry, owing to the dangerous illness of his wife, was unable to go, and the command went to Lieutenant William Whittaker. A large number of friends and neighbors witnessed their departure. Many of the men went with the expectation that they should never return. They expected they should soon meet on the battlefield the veteran soldiers of England. At 12 o'clock, noon, the line was formed, and six gallons of the favorite drink of the day was passed to the men, and amid the loud hurrahs of the men, women and children, they commenced their march. They camped the first night at Petersham, and on the evening of the third day they passed in review before Gov. Strong on "Boston Common." Lieutenant Whittaker was personally complimented by Gov. Strong for the fine appearance of his men and for their promptness in responding to the call. But the British, learning of the preparations for their reception, retreated to their ships and sailed away. The company remained in the vicinity of Boston two months, and were then discharged and sent to their homes. Two of them, Samuel Haskell and Jason Phinney, made the journey on foot in 23 hours. In 1855, all the survivors of these men, and their surviving widows, were granted by Congress a warrant of 160 acres of Government land.

In 1814, Gov. Strong ordered a draft for a regiment of soldiers, for the defence of the coast of Massachusetts, from the towns of this vicinity, with orders to report at New Salem for organization. The draft was made on Sunday, September 12th. The men drafted from New Salem were: William Smith, John Shaw, Samuel Shaw, Joseph Shaw, Asa Powers, John Powers, John Fay and Andrew Newell. Among the officers of the regiment were Samuel Putnam of New Salem, paymaster, and Rev. Alpheus Harding, of New Salem, chaplain. A few of the drafted men obtained substitutes and one or two paid their commutation money, $50.00, with which substitutes were readily obtained. Two or three days were spent in New Salem in organizing the regiment, during which time it rained almost incessantly, and on Friday morning the regiment left New Salem amid the shouts and huzzars of about five hundred people, who had assembled to witness their departure. On Tuesday, the 20th, they arrived in Boston, and reported to the Adjutant General. This regiment was kept in Boston about a month.

In 1830-31, when it was proposed to build a railroad from Boston to Worcester, there was great excitement in this and the neighboring towns. They said "the cost of building the road would ruin the country; there would be no use for horses, and everything would go to ruin." The representative to the General Court was Ebenezer Torry, a man of great intelligence and discernment, and who for many years had held many of the offices in the town. When he came home at the close of the term, he told them how he had worked and voted for the railroad, and of the benefit it would be to the country, but the men of New Salem would have nothing to do with him; it ended his political life. He could never again be elected to any office. More than 60 years ago, we heard the old man tell the story of his defeat and predict that railroads would become common all over this country.

For many years previous to the building of the Vermont & Massachusetts railroad through the towns of Athol and Orange there was a line of six-horse stage coaches from Brattleboro to Worcester, which passed through this town. One of the stage drivers and proprietors of the route was Ginery Twitchell, whose birthplace and early home was here. Later he became president of the Boston & Albany railroad, and was for four years a member of Congress from one of the Boston districts.

In 1843 and 1844, several families in this town were converted to the Mormon faith and, in the spring of 1846, about 35 persons, with six two-horse teams, commenced their journey for Nauvoo, Ill., and expecting later to go with the Mormon people to California, then a province of Mexico. I saw the departure of these people and, with a boy's curiosity, I wondered where they were going and what they were going for. Some of these people are yet living in Utah. Joseph Woodbury, with his family, returned after an absence of two years. He returned with the same horses, harnesses and wagon that carried him to Nauvoo; but he did not come back a Mormon. Later he became a minister of the Methodist church. Among the number who went with the Mormons was the family of Greene Haskell. Although not a believer in Mormonism, Mr. Haskell could not bear the separation from his wife and children, so he decided to go to California and await the coming of the Mormon people, who were expected to arrive a year or two later. He went to Boston and sailed with Captain Sutter. They were nine months in making the passage, forty days of which time was occupied in getting around Cape Horn. He assisted Captain Sutter in building a mill on one of the branches of the Sacramento. As he was standing by the flowing water, which was making a channel from the mill-wheel to the main stream, he discovered the beautiful gold shining brightly in the water, and the news spread rapidly all over the world.

In the great Rebellion, the story of which is familiar to many who are here today, New Salem did her full share. The town furnished one hundred and thirteen men, twelve of whom never returned, and today their bones lie mingled with the soil of nearly every southern state. The men of New Salem were in nearly all of the important engagements of the war. They were at Roanoke Island and Newburn, at Fair Oaks and Seven Pines, at Fredericksburg and Antietam, Port Hudson and Vicksburg, with Grant in all the battles of the Wilderness, and they stood by and saw the closing scenes at the surrender of Lee.

Adolphus Porter was wounded at the battle of Newburn, sent home and granted a pension. He soon threw away his pension, enlisted again, and served to the end of the war. William N. Dexter was for nearly a year a prisoner at Andersonville. Foster Smith was killed at one of the battles of the Wilderness. At the attack on Port Hudson, June 13th, 1863, Walter T. Putnam was killed. John Tyler Bliss was killed in one of the battles before Richmond. Albert Bliss, whose regiment was in one of the mountains of Tennessee, was granted a furlough to come home and visit his wife and children. He died on the journey, but his companions tenderly brought with them his body and buried it among his kindred. David Bliss died at one of the hospitals at Washington. Elliott Towne died in Fredericksburg, in 1863. Upon a tablet in the cemetery in North New Salem is the following pathetic inscription: To the memory of William Leighton, who died at Yorktown, Va., May, 1863, aged 15 years.

In the late war with Spain our representative Ola N. Cole followed close behind the "rough rider" at El Caney and San Juan.

Although our town made an early appropriation for schools, from the stand point of today, we should say that these schools were not of a high order. About eight weeks in winter and possibly as much in summer was considered a liberal amount of schooling; it was almost impossible to obtain suitable teachers previous to the time of New Salem Academy. In 1780 the town was divided into 16 school districts, which remained about the same for nearly a hundred years. The districts held an annual meeting at which time a clerk and prudential committee were chosen. The prudential committee hired the teachers and taxes were assessed upon the district for the building and repair of school houses by a vote of the district. One hundred years ago the salary of the female teachers was from $1.25 to $1.50 per week and often, when money was scarce, the teacher boarded around, that is, the families would board the teacher for a week or more without pay, and I have heard some of these teachers say it was a very pleasant experience to them. The families usually doing their best to make the teacher's stay pleasant and agreeable. The money raised for support of schools was usually divided among the districts by the following plan; one third to each district, one third in proportion to number of scholars in each district and one third in proportion to valuation of each district.

I have several times spoken of the military companies of the town. From 1760 to 1835 all able bodied men from eighteen to forty-five years of age, were obliged to belong to a military company and to meet on the last Wednesdays of May and October and at such other times as should be specially appointed for military drill, or as it was said in those days for "training." For many years there were three companies, and in the years of my earliest remembrance, there was in our town more than a score of Colonels, Majors, Captains and Lieutenants. I should say from what I have learned from a former generation that this duty was considered a pleasant one. The officers of the company were expected to furnish such refreshments as the customs of the time demanded; and in choosing their officers, the question was often discussed, "will this man be liberal in treating." The companies were formed into a regiment with companies from the surrounding towns, and once a year they met at a convenient place for "muster" as it was called. The law concerning the dress, equipments, and general appearance of the men was very strict, it was as follows, viz: for non-appearance on 1st Tuesday of May a fine of $3.00; non-appearance at any company training $2.00; deficiency of gun, bayonet or ramrod $1.00; deficiency of cartridge-box, cartridges or knapsack 30c; deficiency of two spare flints or priming wire 20c; disorderly firing, not more than $20 nor less than $5; neglecting to meet to choose officers $1; disorderly behaviour $20; neglect of regimental duty $4; giving false information or refusing to give names of persons liable to do military duty $20; unmilitary conduct of musicians not more than $20, nor less than $10; neglect of towns in providing ammunition not more than $500, nor less than $20; neglect in wearing uniform $2; for release, when ordered to march if paid within twenty-four hours, $50.00.

One hundred years ago insurance of buildings was a thing unknown to our people. When a house was destroyed by fire, the neighbors and townsmen of the unfortunate man immediately assisted in rebuilding his home. The destruction of houses by fire was very seldom in comparison with that of the present day.

On a Monday night in the summer of 1801 the house of Paletiah Day was destroyed by fire; on Wednesday fifty of his neighbors went to his wood lot, timber for a new house was hewn, and the shingles made; on Thursday the frame was raised; on Friday the shingles were put on, the walls were enclosed and the floor of the kitchen was laid; on Saturday he moved into his new house with such furniture as his neighbors were able to give him; on Saturday evening one hundred and twenty-one of his neighbors and friends came to congratulate him, and all of the matrons and maidens and the men and boys took part in the festive dance.

As the population of the town largely increased, the want of a higher and more liberal education than afforded by the district schools, became apparent. The subject in all its phases was for several years discussed and at the same time the building of a new church to take the place of the one built sixty years before. Among those who took a prominent part in this discussion were Rev. Joel Foster, Dea. Thomas Kendall, Varney Pierce Esq. and Ezekiel Kellogg Jr. Esq. At a town meeting held on the 14th day of January 1793, a committee was appointed who at a subsequent meeting reported, that the town should move the old meeting house to the north-east corner of the common, so as to be suitable for an Academy and town house. The Academy was to be on the first floor and the town house on the second floor. The Academy was incorporated by an act of the Legislature February 25, 1795. Samuel Adams was at that time Gov. of Massachusetts. This building was destroyed by fire Oct. 4, 1837 and in 1838 another building was erected to be used only as an Academy. The trustees mentioned in the act of incorporation were Rev. Joel Foster, Rev. Solomon Read, Rev. Joseph Blodget, Rev. Joseph Kilburn, David Smead Esq., John Goldsbury Esq., Jonathan Warner Esq., David Sexton Esq., Ebenezer Mattoon Jr. Esq., David Blodget Esq., Martin Kingsley Esq., Ezekiel Kellogg Jr. Esq., Samuel Kendell, Varney Pierce and Asa Merriam.

The first meeting of trustees was at the hotel of Dea. Samuel Kendell, July 7, 1795 at 12 o'clock noon. Among the rules passed at the meeting was the following, viz: "That the tuition shall not exceed one shilling per week."

At a later meeting it was voted to advertise the school in the two newspapers published in Worcester, also in Thomas Almanac. The first principal of the Academy was Fowler Dickinson. He has been followed by forty-six successors; most of them have been good scholars and successful teachers.

The school from its commencement had many students from our town and from the surrounding country, but the tuition and the help our townsmen were able to give, was not sufficient to defray the expenses of the institution, so a petition was presented to the General Court asking for help. The Legislature granted to the Academy a township of land which they could locate upon any of the unappropriated lands, belonging to the state of Massachusetts in the district of Maine. A committee was sent to Maine and after looking for several weeks among the public lands, they found nothing that they thought worthy for settlement, and they began their homeward journey, discouraged and disappointed. They were obliged to wait a day or two at Bangor, for a schooner to take them to Boston. While sitting beside the blazing fire at a hotel, they told the story of their wanderings and disappointments; an old Indian, also sitting beside the fire apparently asleep, said, "give me much strong water and me show you good land;" his conditions were immediately complied with, and the next morning after giving him more strong water, they commenced their journey.

They followed him in a north-easterly direction about one hundred and fifty miles to a place near the boundary line of New Brunswick and not far from the St. John river, and there he showed them good land: which they immediately selected. But they waited in vain for purchasers of their lands, and finally the need of the Academy was so great that James Houlton and several other residents of this town, sold their farms and went as settlers to this township, which they named "Houlton" and which became the county seat of Aroostook County. From the sale of this land the Academy received about five thousand dollars.

It has often been said and has been recorded in history, that the Academy lost much of this grant of land by the readjustment of the boundary line between the state of Maine and New Brunswick. This statement was not correct. All of the land belonging to the Academy was sold long anterior to the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, which was made in Washington, Aug. 5, 1842, by Daniel Webster and Lord Ashburton.

1856 the Academy received a gift of $1,000 from Ira Stratton of Cambridge; in 1870 $10,000 from the state of Massachusetts and $5,000 was raised by subscription. In 1896 by the will of Mrs. Parmelia Butterfield of Orange $1,000 was received.

Of the long line of eminent men and women who received their education from New Salem Academy I have time only to speak of a few. One of the earliest graduates was Abel Rawson who went to northern Ohio; he was a successful lawyer and became an eminent judge; his three brothers Bass, Secretary and Laquino, were noted physicians and leading men in the northern reserve. Ex. Gov. A. H. Bullock, Judge P. Emory Aldrich, Hon. Alpheus Harding, Hon. Wm. Richardson of Galveston, Texas, Rev. Francis E. Tower, Hon. Collins Whittaker, for 20 years U. S. Consul for the port of St. John, N. B., Hon. Elisha Allen, U. S. minister to the Sandwich Islands and who became later Chief Justice of the islands and who was sent by them as special Ambassador to the U. S.

It was my good fortune to be a student at New Salem Academy from 1852 to 1856. The Academy at this time was in a very flourishing condition; in 1853 the students numbered more than 100. Their homes were in New York, Boston, Cambridge, Chelsea, Ashland, Worcester, Fitchburg, Barre, Petersham, Athol, and many other towns. Among the assistant teachers in these years, were Ozi W. Whittaker, now one of the bishops of the Episcopal church. Miss Sarah B. Packard and Miss Hattie E. Giles, who by the establishment in Atlanta, Ga., of an institution for the education of colored girls, have erected to themselves a monument which will perpetuate their memory in all coming time. By the establishment of high schools in all the larger towns around us the Academy has lost much of its patronage; but to us and the small towns near us, the old Academy will ever be of the greatest benefit, and as days, months, years and ages shall circle away, may it be tenderly cared for, and its light ever be burning brightly.

In 1895 by vote of the town a high school was established, which has been conducted in connection with the Academy, to the mutual benefit of both.

In 1892 the Legislature required all the towns of the state to be formed into districts, which should choose a superintendent of schools. Dana, Greenwich and Prescott were associated with this town and E. L. Adams, who had for several years been preceptor of the Academy, was chosen Supt. He was reelected the present year, but has resigned to accept a better position in his native state of Maine. His successor is W. G. Davis of South Framingham.

In politics the people of the town have always taken a prominent part. In the time previous to the war of 1812 the town was decidedly anti-Federalist. In the division between the Whig and Democratic parties the town became Whig by a small majority. Upon the dissolution of the Whig party and the formation of the Republican party the town became decidedly Republican and has ever remained so.

In 1838 the present town house was built. In that year the United States government distributed among the States the surplus revenue which had accumulated in the treasury. New Salem's share of this surplus revenue was sufficient to pay the expense of building the town house.

In 1846 a brass band was organized in the north part of the town. The band maintained its organization until 1857, when by death and removal of many of its members, it was dissolved. In 1849 the band was appointed by the Governor to furnish music for the encampment of the militia in the western part of the state and it was said that the band was one of the very best in the state. The following is a list of its members: Arad W. Lynde, John D. Smith, James F. Smith, Horatio Smith, Rufus Day, Franklin Haskins, Arad Terry, Darwin Whitaker, Aldison Phillips, Francis B. Crowl, Hiram H. Robbins, Ransom Pierce, W. W. Pierce, E. C. Thompson. The leaders of the band were Francis B. Crowl and E. C. Thompson. One of them, Darwin Whitaker, is with us today.

The Farmers' band which furnishes us with music today was organized in 1891 and is composed of members from all parts of the town. The following is a list of its past and present members: Walter E. Crowl, William Bullard, Fred Ballard, Fred Curtis, Fred Whipple, D. A. Stowell, Frank Hemmingway, Everett Newland, C. J. Moulton, Alfred Moulton, Sewall King, E. C. Chamberlain, Ralph Freeman, John Marshall, Harry Cogswell, George W. Fisher. Its first instructor and leader was Frank McGibeny, later Walter T. Crowl was leader, at present Fred Ballard is leader. The band has furnished music for many public meetings in this and the neighboring towns.

The first minister was the Rev. Samuel Kendell of Woburn, a graduate of Harvard college. He was ordained Dec. 4, 1742. The earliest records of the church were dated on that year, so it is supposed that the church was organized at that time. Mr. Kendell brought with him two slaves, John and Chloe, who remained with him many years. He was a man of culture and refinement and was universally beloved. He was the pastor till March 1776, a period of 34 years, when he resigned, but continued to live in New Salem until his death in 1792. He was succeeded by Rev. Joel Foster in 1778, who resigned in 1802.

In 1778 by an act of the general court a parish society was organized distinct from the town organization; previous to this time nearly all church affairs were arranged in town meetings. The minister was called by vote of the town and a tax was assessed for the payment of his salary. In 1794 a new church was built and it has been said that it was one of the best, if not the very best, in the county, and it is in that church that we are assembled today. In the years succeeding the building of this church, the congregations were very large, often filling this house to its utmost capacity. One Sunday the pastor of this church made an exchange with the Rev. Joseph Estabrook of the church in Athol. As he looked over the large congregation before commencing his sermon, he said "I am glad to be permitted today to come up out of the wilderness and to speak to this audience of civilization, culture and refinement."

Rev. Warren Pierce became pastor 1804 and resigned in 1807. Next came Rev. Alpheus Harding, who was pastor thirty-seven years; he was succeeded by Rev. James Locke. Rev. Claudrus Bradford was ordained in 1851 and remained two years. Rev. Thomas Weston was ordained in 1856 remaining two years. In 1866-67 Rev. Thomas Pond was the preacher. The last pastor, Rev. J. Nelson Trask, resigned in 1874, since which time, while the society has kept its organization perfect, the preaching has been by occasional supplies.

In 1800 a Universalist society was organized in the north part of the town, a town was laid out on the farm of John Haskell, near north pond, a common was arranged, a frame for a meeting house was put up and there the work stopped; no houses were built and the frame after standing a few years was taken down and was used for building a hotel at New Salem centre. The common yet remains, the land has never been occupied, has never been cultivated and no trees have ever grown upon it.

In 1807 a meeting house was built in the north part of the town, its location was near the house of B. W. Fay; in 1836 this house was moved to North New Salem. From 1807 to 1823 Rev. Alpheus Harding supplied the pulpit on the last Sunday of every month. In 1823 there came a separation in the Congregational churches of Massachusetts, the first church with their pastor took the side of Unitarian Congregationalists and the people of the north part of the town became Unitarian Congregationalists, and organized a church. They bought the meeting house from the first parish and installed the Rev. Levi French as their pastor. In the call asking him to become their settled minister, they offered him the following salary: "One hundred and fifty dollars from the present members of the society, fifty dollars in produce at its market value, also to furnish his fire wood and that he shall receive all the subscriptions from those who may hereafter join the society, and all the money that may be obtained from charitable societies, until it shall amount to one hundred dollars, making in all three hundred dollars a year; also two cows, and to move his family, and allow him three Sabbaths a year to visit his friends should he desire to do so." Mr. French resigned in 1830. In 1832 Rev. Erastus Curtis was installed and remained pastor till 1843; from 1843 till 1867 the pulpit was supplied by preachers from various denominations. In 1867 a Methodist society was organized, receiving cooperation and assistance from the remaining members of the original society.

The M. E. preachers were as follows 1867-68; Henry H. Olds

1869, William Wignall; 1870-71-72 Randell Mitchell; 1873-74 Charles E. Seaver; 1875-76 Leonard P. Frost; 1877 Moseley Dwight; 1878 W. Wendell; 1879 by order of the presiding elder, without consultation with the church members, the church was disorganized and members transferred to the Orange M. E. church.

In 1883 was begun the present arrangement of the pastor of the Congregational church of New Salem supplying the North New Salem church on Sunday afternoons. The church edifice was thoroughly remodeled and repaired in 1901 and 1902. Jan. 2, 1903 a Congregational church was organized and recognized March 4, 1903, by council.

The third Congregational church was organized on Aug. 13, 1845 at New Salem Centre. A church edifice was built in 1854. The pastors have been Revs. William H. Hayward, Erastus Curtis, Wm. Kemp, David Eastman, Samuel H. Amsden, W. S. Clark, David Plummer, J. T. Closson, Albert V. House.

In 1901-2 a parsonage was built, mainly through the efforts of the pastor, Rev. A. V. House.

1792 a Baptist church was built in the south part of the town; in 1800 the building was moved three miles to the north of its original location. 1835 the building was taken down and a new structure was erected directly upon the line between New Salem and Prescott. This church became extinct in 1875; in 1878 the building was removed into Prescott and converted into a store.

There is a Methodist church building and parsonage in New Salem close to the Prescott line and belonging to M. E. church of North Prescott. This society is partially composed of families living in the south part of New Salem.

In all of the churches of the olden time there were no fire-places or stoves, and in the coldest of winter, all were obliged to remain and listen to the long sermon, which often went up to the 16thly and 24thly, and sometimes to the 32ndly. About a hundred years ago a little stove was invented which the ladies filled with live coals, and placed under their feet. We have here today a specimen of one of these stoves. Later when the custom of putting stoves into churches for the purpose of making them warm and comfortable, there was great opposition. And in a neighboring town it was said, that two maiden ladies were so overcome by the heat from the new stove in their church that they fainted away, and were obliged to be carried out into the cool air before they recovered, and the strange part of the story is that no fire had ever been made in the stove. Probably they did not need fire as much in their stoves then as now because they had so much more in their sermons.

In 1889 by vote of town a public library was established, a bequest of $1000 was given to the town by the will of Mrs. Eliza Ellis, the income from it to be forever used for the purchase of books; in 1895 was received by the will of Mrs. Pamela Butterfield of Orange $500 for the benefit of the library. The library now contains 2000 volumes and by the establishment of branches in the remote parts of the town is easily accessible to all. It is well patronized by the readers of the town and also by our summer visitors.

Several eminent lawyers have practiced their profession here, prominent among them was the Hon. Samuel C. Allen, who lived here from 1802 to 1820; he was a member of Congress from 1816 to 1828, also his son, the Hon. Frederic H. Allen, who represented the town several times in the Legislature, also the Hon. N. F. Bryant, and there is one whose birthplace was here and whose early life was passed here, and in the years of his absence has ever been looking back to the old scenes. He is with us today and I know that no one will be more gladly welcomed than Geo. W. Horr Esq. of Athol.

There are in the city of Worcester three lawyers who received their education from New Salem Academy, two of them natives of this town, but as their life work is but just begun I leave their record to the future historian.

The first representative to the general court was John Houlton, elected in 1754. The town has represented by forty different men of whom eight are now living. Among the oldest of them is Samuel Putnam, who represented the town in 1847 and who was born in 1806. Hon. Alpheus Harding 1851 and 1853, and later was a Representative, also a Senator from Athol. Beriah W. Fay was Representative in 1865. From 1806 to 1836 the town was entitled to two members in the general court. Varney Pierce was elected in 1796 and with the exception of two years, was re-elected every year till the time of his death in 1823. William Whittaker who had served three years in the House of Representatives was elected Senator in 1844 and died at Boston while on duty. Samuel Giles was elected his successor.

The following is the exact list of Representatives from this town to date viz: 1754 John Houlton, 1756 John Gunn, 1758 to 1760 Fellows Billings, 1785, 1787, 1791, 1792, 1794, 1795, 1805 Ezekiel Kellogg Jr., 1783, 1784 Jacob Sampson, 1786 William Paige, 1796-7, 1799 to 1823 Varney Pierce, 1806-9 Samuel C. Allen, 1813-16 Benjamin Stacy, 1801 James Fellon, 1802 Edward Upton, 1816-37 John Putnam, 1828-32 Ebenezer Torry, 1829, 1830-34 William Whittaker, 1829, 1830-34 Frederick H. Allen, 1836-37 Rev. Alpheus Harding, 1838 Luther Hunt, 1841 James Knight, 1842-52 Dr. Robert Andrews, 1843 Abner Smith, 1844 Josiah B. Harding, 1845 Frederick Pierce, 1846 Seth C. Smith, 1847 Samuel Putnam, 1848 Josiah B. Thompson, 1849 William T. Giles, 1850 Warren Horr, 1851-53 Alpheus Harding Jr., 1855 Alfred G. Williams, 1854 Charles A. Perry, 1862 Royal Whittaker, 1865 Beriah W. Fay, 1869 Lyman E. Moore, 1872 David Eastman, 1875 Willard Putnam, 1882 Daniel Ballard, 1889 Henry D. Hamilton, 1901 Edwin F. Stowell.

Senators: 1844 Hon. William Whittaker, died in office; 1844 Hon. Samuel Giles.

Members of Congress: 1816-22 Hon. Samuel C. Allen, Hon. Shepherd Cary, who was a member of Congress from Maine in 1844-46 was a native of this town and a grandson of Benjamin Haskell. Hon. Elisha Allen, son of the Hon. Samuel C. Allen, who was born here, was also a member of Congress from Maine. Delegate to the constitutional convention in 1789 was Jeremiah Ballard 2d. Delegate to the constitutional convention in 1853 was Dr. Robert Andrews.

Beriah W. Fay was elected special County Commissioner in 1872 and still continues to hold that office.

Among the industries of New Salem is the "New Salem Creamery Company," whose factory is located at Millington. It was established in 1894. It receives the milk from 350 cows and makes daily 300 lbs. of butter.

At Millington is the grist mill of Lyman E. Moore. The first mill was built in the early days of the town; the second on the same place in 1800; a larger and more commodious mill in 1858. There is annually ground and sold from this mill 50 car loads of grain. Previous to 1848 all corn and oats consumed in this town was raised here.

The greatest industry of the town during the past 25 years, has been the manufacture of lumber. This has been done by five water-mills and several portable steam-mills; it is estimated that during this time 5,000,000 ft. has been cut annually. This lumber is sold mostly for the manufacture of boxes and matches.

Although the best of our territory has been taken from us, and our population somewhat reduced, and our sons and daughters have gone out all over our country, there is no cause for discouragement. This town is, and will be, just what we make it. We have the same pure air and beautiful scenery which our ancestors so much enjoyed. The same blue sky is over our heads, and the same Heavenly Father that watched over them, and guided them, is watching over and guiding us. We shall adapt ourselves to the new conditions and the new surroundings, and when a hundred and fifty years from today the historian shall dip his pen in the ink, he will find much to record. He will speak of an increase of business and population; he will speak of the cottages of the summer visitors, which will be scattered all over our beautiful hills; he will speak of a long line of eminent men and women, whose birth place was among the hills and valleys of this town; he will speak of another student from Andover who will built us more houses. And in those days of darkness and disaster, which, as they come to all nations, will surely again come to us, he will tell us of another Jeremiah Meacham, of more Jeremiahs Ballards, of another Benjamin Haskell, of another William Stacy, of another Leonard Curtis, of another Foster Smith and of another Walter Putnam.

New Salem was my birthplace, and it is a great satisfaction to me to know, that when my life work is ended, it is to be my last resting place.

“My native town thee,
Land of the noble free,
Thy name I love.
I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills,
My heart with rapture thrills, like that above.”

ADDRESS

BY GEORGE W. HERR.

Since I moved from New Salem, my birthplace, about 40 years ago, to Athol, to which town in February, 1830, part of New Salem was annexed, also in March, 1837, part of New Salem called Little Grant, was annexed to Orange and to Athol. I have had knowledge each year of one fact that has never failed to attract my special notice, to wit: the amount of a tax assessed to me upon real estate in my good old native town; and so far I have been able to meet it, without any part thereof having been sold by the collector for non-payment. Thus far I claim to have been a good non-resident of my native town, while living in Athol, to which town New Salem had contributed on two occasions part of her territory. The towns have always been good neighbors, and each takes an interest in the prosperity of the other.

The corporation of the Millers River bank of Athol, established in 1854, afterwards Millers River National bank, came to New Salem in 1856 for a cashier, and Alpheus Harding held that office and the office of its president until his resignation of the last-named office was reluctantly received, only a few years ago. As school teachers, in manufactural occupations, mercantile pursuits, agriculture, and in almost all branches of business carried on in the thriving and prosperous town of Athol, New Salem has continuously had successful representatives.

Pardon me for reference to an event which may be deemed personal. In July, 1864, we had an old-fashioned Fourth of July celebration on the hill near Cooleyville, once owned by my great-grandfather, Robert Hoar, and God willing, I hope, while yet the same pine trees are standing, under which we had the picnic, heard the Declaration of Independence read, an oration, toasts, short speeches and music, with Father Grover as toast-master, then in demand on Independence day; in fact a good old-fashioned celebration, brimful of patriotic enjoyment and enthusiasm.

New Salem, as the historical facts establish, has a history and standing among the towns of the old Bay State most honorable and praiseworthy.

To-day we meet to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the town's incorporation, and hold the 30th successive reunion of the alumni and friends of the academy. Let us refer to the year 1846, a year to be classified with halcyon and prosperous days of the academy: female department, 67; male department, 94; total, 161 students.

One object of the academy was to enable the young man to win the inestimable prize of a good name and a reputation untarnished, and a standing and an influence which would enable him to elevate his own fortunes, and to become a benefactor to his fellow men in all the relations in life,—to be an honest man, which is the noblest work of God. It assisted all the students of both sexes to train their minds to habits of thought and attention; to exercise and apply the powers of the mind, to enlarge its bounds by a knowledge of the principles and elementary facts of the sciences, intellectual, moral and physical; and by all these combined to form the character, invigorate the understanding, and incite the heart and will to generous aspirations. This old time-honored institution has accomplished splendid results. You have only to examine the long lists of its students to find the records of many successful in business pursuits, faithful instructors, distinguished in professional life, some of them elevated to highest places in church and state. And how numerous are they who have passed their days in the humble walks of life, in pleasant, happy family ties, in which their mutual lives have been "ideally true and poetically beautiful," lives of usefulness, discharging their duties faithfully and honestly, uplifting and benefitting their neighbors and the individuals of different communities in all sections of this broad land.

New Salem has always been true to the general principles which have governed the organization of the townships.

The early settlers of Plymouth colony discovered that the grant of corporate powers to the small separate settlements, and the passage of general laws giving them such powers and privileges as would enable them to provide for their local needs, and subjecting them to the performance of such duties as might be required by the government of the whole colony, was the best and fittest way for the transaction of the affairs of the different localities, and they so provided.

This system, inaugurated at Plymouth, commended itself to the Massachusetts colony, so that it was adopted there at the outset. The early settlers wanted religious teachers and institutions, and at that period it was for the benefit of the civil state that the institutions of religion should be maintained through some organization having legal powers to provide for the support of religious teachers. They wanted schools, and of course they needed schoolhouses, and for the erection of these, school districts. All of the wants were supplied by appropriate legislation. These poor little schoolhouses, whether "red" or painted some other color, or unpainted, would not make a great show by the side of some modern institutions, but they served the purpose they were intended for, quite as useful, perhaps, as if the seats had had cushions, and the desks had been of mahogany.

The town was the efficient means which secured the prosperity of the household. The several families, farmers, and mechanics, laborers, and professional men, need for the development of their resources, and the greatest enjoyment of their privileges, something beyond even the mutual support of each other in their various neighborhoods, and they found it in the town. It enlarged, while it concentrated, their sympathies, formed and moulded their opinions, and gave expansion to their united will.

While we hold in most reverent regard the heroic deeds of the fathers of the republic who achieved independence, and in which tremendous struggle for the principles of civil liberty the sons of New Salem so promptly responded, yet, to these principles and maxims of civil liberty, new lustre and glory, if possible, have been added by the imperishable deeds of valor performed by the loyal soldiers in the great Civil war.

The sons of New Salem, who gave their best services and duties, or their lives for their country, to save the sacred legacy which had come down to us from the Revolutionary epoch, are especially dear in our remembrance upon this anniversary. The privates and non-commissioned officers are as fully entitled to praise and gratitude as the officers. It was the steadfast valor of the common soldier which saved the Union.

LETTERS OF REGRET.

FROM F. N. THOMPSON.

I suppose that the honor which your committee conferred upon me, by extending to me an invitation to attend your sesquicentennial and participate in the exercises of the day, may be set down to my official connection with the people of New Salem. It hardly seems possible that a generation has passed from time to eternity, since I first received your suffrages for the position which I held for almost 30 years.

Perhaps the case of the late Ransom Adams, whose will was filed Oct. 4, 1870, was the first in which I was officially connected with a New Salem estate, and the case remained open in the court longer, I think, than any other, from that town, the last entry upon the docket being made in 1898.

My relations with the people of the town who have had occasion to transact business with the probate court have ever been most cordial and satisfactory to me, and I feel deeply thankful to the citizens of New Salem for their many favors.

Several things have occurred closely connecting the towns of New Salem and Greenfield. Of the towns which now constitute Franklin county, only Deerfield, Northfield, Sunderland and Greenfield are older than New Salem, and Greenfield is only six days the elder, her birthday being June 9 and New Salem the 15th.

When these new municipalities came into existence, William Pitt, the "Great Commoner" was just coming into public notice. He lived to use his immense influence in opposition to the measures instituted by the ministers of an unwise ruler, which oppressed and incensed the people of these and other similiar communities. For this George II. deprived him of office, but the time came when his successor, George III, was compelled to listen to his words of wisdom.

One man made common fame for Greenfield and New Salem, Samuel C. Allen, who graduated at Dartmouth in 1794 became the minister of Northfield the ensuing year. He soon quitted the ministry and studied law with John Barrett of that town. He was admitted to the bar in 1800 and settled in New Salem. He achieved success, and in 1816 was elected to Congress as the successor of Rev. Samuel Taggart of Colrain, who had served for 14 years, and declined a re-election. Mr. Allen served his district in Congress for 12 years. In 1822 he removed to Greenfield and finally to Northfield, where upon a beautiful farm, he ended his days. The home place is yet held by a descendant. Three of his sons became eminent lawyers. Two of these became members of Congress from Main. Elisha H. Allen after serving in Congress emigrated to the Sandwich Islands, and became chief justice of the kingdom. Samuel C. Allen was for many years a representative from Northfield to the legislature; was celebrated as an agriculturalist and temperance reformer, and for several years was postmaster of East Boston.

Proctor Pierce was born in New Salem, March 20, 1768, son of Abraham and Ruth (Page) Pierce. He was also descended from that John Proctor of old Salem, who was hung during the witch-croft delusion in Massachusetts. Proctor Pierce graduated at Dartmouth in 1796, and was soon elected to teach the New Salem Academy. Here he remained until his removal to Greenfield in 1800, where he taught the village school. His celebrity as a teacher brought many pupils from different parts of the state to take advantage of his methods; as he prepared young men for admittance to college. Many men who afterwards became prominent in life were his pupils. The late Hon. George Grennell, Chief Justice Daniel Wells, Judge Franklin Ripley, Rev. Preserved Smith and many others were members of his classes. In 1800 while teaching in Greenfield, he delivered an oration upon the life and character of Gen. George Washington.

In 1802 he married Susanna, daughter of Rev. Roger Newton, the minister of Greenfield, and became a deacon in the first church. For a few years he was engaged in trade in Greenfield, but teaching was his chosen profession, and he followed this employment in Lynn, Cambridge and Boston. He died in Boston April 27, 1821, aged 53 years.

A grandson, Isaac Newton Pierce, resides in Boston, his time being largely occupied in antiquarian and geneological study.

When in 1814 a draft was ordered to raise an army for the defence of the Massachusetts and Maine coast towns and cities, New Salem was made the rendezvous for the men from Franklin county. According to a letter written by Alpha Ryther, a member of the Greenfield company under command of Capt. David Strickland, (which lies before me,) they remained at New Salem several days on account of wet weather. He says, "Our officers went to a man's house by the name of Knight, (and applied) for admittance to lodge in the house but he resisted; we went however and made ourselves at home, helped ourselves to the garden sauce and some of the soldiers killed a goose, stuffed the skin and carried it through the street. He was a Federalist, (whether referring to the man or the goose, I know not) and a friend to Britain. After we started from New Salem for Boston, our company wanted some water and hauled up to a place to procure it, but the man happened to be of the same stamp as old Knights; he refused it, and some one of the our company ketched hold of the old bucket and hauled it all over, well sweep and all." These early incidents, while not very creditable to the militia of the day; show the intense political enmity which existed at that period of the national history.

In 1790 New Salem having 1543 inhabitants was only exceeded in population by Conway with 2092 people, among the towns now composing Franklin county. In 1820 she had grown to be the largest town in the county, having 2146 inhabitants. Wonderful changes are taking place day by day. It seems as though the days had come of which the prophet Nahum spoke, when he said: "The chariots shall rage in the streets; they shall jostle one against another in the Broadway; they shall seem like torches; they shall run like the lightnings."

FROM GEORGE S. MANN.

WILLARD PUTNAM, ESQ.

Dear Sir:—Some days since I received from my brother in Orange a program of the forth-coming 150th anniversary of the settlement of New Salem to be held there the 20th of this month. The Manns are a Petersham family, having descended from Ensign Mann, who married Alice, daughter of Rev. Aaron Whitney, the first minister of Petersham, about the year 1773. My father, William Mann, of Petersham, married in 1833, Abigail Cook, daughter of Benjamin Cook, who was then a resident of New Salem, or perhaps somewhat earlier and had been since about the year 1817, having removed to your town from Guildhall, Vt.

About the time of my father's marriage he purchased a small farm of his father-in-law, Mr. Cook, situated in the north-easterly part of New Salem and on a short road, or highway leading from the Joseph Parker place by Ezekiel Newell farm to the Petersham and New Salem main road, and during a year or two after this purchased and lived on this place, and here I was born Nov. 25, 1834, and for a year or so, four or five years later on I well remember living there and attending school in the adjoining Athol district. Some of the neighbors I well remember—William Rice, James Meacham, Mr. Newell, a Moulton family, next south of us, and then came the Totmans. Very soon after this event my father sold this place to James J. Sanderson and moved back to Petersham, his native town.

Since that early period I have known but little of my birth-place. Years since, say a dozen or so, I passed by the spot where the house stood on the west side of the highway, the barn and other buildings on the opposite side of the street, all of which were gone, and nothing remained to remind one of where the buildings stood, except a lilac bush near where the old house was formerly. It was a very fair one-story pitched roof dwelling with a long kitchen and two square rooms in the northerly part. There was a small ell projecting on the road southerly, which I remember was our best room. The north westerly room was occupied by my great-grandmother, then in her 94th year. She died at our home in Petersham in 1840, aged 95. She enjoyed a pension, her husband, George Fillmon, having been a soldier in the Revolution. I am sorry that I know so little regarding the early history of your town.

If my memory serves me up here in the Green mountains I believe one of your early ministers, Rev. Mr. Kendall, married another daughter of Rev. Aaron Whitney, the Tory preacher of Petersham. I was not one of the fortunate ones who were schooled at your Academy—Thomas Marshall Mann, my farther's cousin, I think, was once there, and I believe another cousin, Samuel Mann. Sanford B. Cook of Petersham, a consin of mine, no doubt was in school there many years since, and I really forget whether or not my brother Horace attended there. Well I am writing too much. For many years I have been interested in family and biographical history and wish we could obtain a more full and complete account of the early doings and facts of the various towns in Massachusetts. I have written this much in reply to your circular, and in considerable of a hurry, in order to meet a party on a walk.

If I possessed the reputation of a Washington or a Lincoln even, I should have considered it an honor to have been born in your town, but as I am only a humble, plain citizen, the place of my nativity will never be advertised or become famous for my having first beheld the light of day within its borders.

Very truly yours,

GEORGE SUMNER MANN.

Brookline, Mass.

ADDRESSES.

Rev. A. V. House of Worcester, formerly of New Salem, was next introduced. He said he could add but little to the already interesting array of pleasant things said about New Salem. He spoke of the great good which will come from the inspiration of the day's exercises. Mr. House spoke feelingly of his work in the town, and of the many benefits which could be gained by living and working in small towns.

W. E. Sibley of Worcester, a class-mate at New Salem academy of President Vaughan, spoke interestingly. He gave good advice to the young men and women of the town, and said that it is not so much what you do, or how you do it in the way of individual achievement, as it is to do your work with a will, and with the end in view of succeeding in that undertaking. Take up a business congenial to you and then stick to it. Mr. Sibley told of his early recollections of New Salem and the affection he had for the old Academy and the town.

MAJ. GENERAL H. C. MERRITT.

One of the interesting short speeches was by Major General H. C. Merritt of Houlton, Maine. General Merritt is in the regular army, and his father was a native of New Salem and attended the Academy. The town of Houlton was a child of New Salem, being settled by a number of good people from New Salem, and so the speaker considered himself a kind of grandchild of the place. He congratulated the many sons and daughters of New Salem, who had so gloriously gone forth and succeeded in life's battle. Much credit can be given the early influence of those men and women.

EX-REPRESENTATIVE W. A. DAVENPORT.

The last speaker of the day was ex-representative W. A. Davenport of Greenfield. He said that for many years Academies were stepping stones to the colleges. To day the high school is fast taking its place, but the speaker believed that in many ways the thoroughness of the present day high school course was not equal to the old academy education. Mr. Davenport glowingly referred to Geo. W. Horr of Athol, and spoke of him as a type of the New Salem graduate, one who could be pointed to with pride. Mr. Davenport continued his address in an interesting strain, and it was very pleasing throughout.

THE BEARS DEN.

The waters of Swift river in their descent from the high lands of the west part of the town to the lower regions of the east, pass through several interesting and romantic places. The most prominent of these is the locality called the "Bears Den." Here the water coming down through an opening in the hills, passes over the rocks and makes a most beautiful waterfall, which is surrounded on each side by cliffs of rock nearly one hundred feet in height; on the right hand side there are several caves which extend many feet back into the rock. It was here that the bold hunter, one of the first settlers of the town, killed a large black bear. It was this incident which gave the locality its name. Many a story has been written and many a song has been sung about the Bears Den. The fall was utilized for a grist mill and wagon shop many years ago. The business was discontinued in 1854.

GEOGRAPHY OF NEW SALEM.

New Salem is the south-east town in the county of Franklin, and is about twenty miles distant from Greenfield, the county seat. The present territory of the town comprises 15,217 acres. The surface of the town is hilly, rugged and mountainous; the highest elevation is in the south-west, where there is an altitude of 1280 feet above the sea level. Nowhere in America is there more beautiful scenery to be found than there is to be seen from New Salem hill—on the north is to be seen Mount Grace; to the north-east is Mount Monadnock in her solitary grandeur; to the east is Wachusett and around and between these giants are a large number of smaller mountains and hills.

The climate of the town is very salubrious and healthy. The lakes and ponds in the town are the reservoir, or Thompson's pond, in the east covering 265 acres; north and south Spectacle ponds covering 80 acres; Hacker's pond west from Spectacle ponds of 20 acres and Hop brook pond. The streams are, the middle branch of Swift river, which has its source in the east part of Wendell and which flows to the east past the village of North New Salem where it is joined by the water from North pond, it then turns to the south and passes through the entire length of the town. It is joined on both sides by numerous small streams, among them on the east is Red brook, on the west is Moose Horn brook and Hop brook.

These ponds and brooks are well filled with pickerel, trout, pouts and other kinds of fish. The State Fish Commissioners have recently placed in Swift river a large number of small trout. The large amount of wood land in the town furnishes a home for the raccoon, the partridge and the fox.

The deer which were here when the town was settled, and which had entirely disappeared, are now quite numerous. They are protected by law.

HISTORIC PLACES MARKED.

The committee have marked five historic places by placing large stones with suitable inscription. One was placed on the site of the old fort and stockade on the south side of the Town Farm; one at the site of the fort near the Academy building; one where the first church was built in 1739; one where the first settlement was made by Jeremiah Meacham in 1737, and one where the Hessian prisoners, captured at Saratoga, passed through this town.

THE ANTIQUARIAN EXHIBIT.

It is well nigh impossible to enumerate the number and write the history of all the articles exhibited, and although but a part of the many things in New Salem preserved for their antiquity were brought out, there were about 500 articles on exhibition.

Charles A. Merriam.—Catalogue of the trustees, instructors and students of New Salem Academy, October, 1830; bed spread made by Mrs. Cyrus Merriam 67 years ago; chair over 125 years old; warming pan; candle mould and candles; pair andirons; shovel and tongs; candle snuffers and tray; old candle stick; pewter porringer; sampler; old tin apple dish; old lace handkerchief; old bracket candle holder; pair brass candle sticks 70 years old; old bread trough; 28 pieces fine old crockery; 7 pieces fine old glass ware.

WHERE IS THE OLD GUN?

At the battle of Bennington, the Americans captured from the British six pieces of light artillery.

Several of them were given to the colony of Massachusetts, and one of these was presented to the town of New Salem, by the General Court. Previous to its capture by General Stark the old gun had had a most eventful, varied and interesting experience. It was manufactured in Dresden, Germany, and was for many years used in the wars against Poland and Austria; it came over to Liverpool with King George's Hessian soldiers; and formed a part of that splendid equipment which General Burgoyne collected for his campaign against the northern colonies. It was brought over in the ship with General Burgoyne and his staff; and we have read in an old history that as the vessels composing the fleet were approaching the gulf of St. Lawrence there suddenly burst upon them from the north a fearful storm, and the transports were scattered in all directions. The Captain of the flag ship ordered all cannons, arms and other munitions of war, brought up and thrown overboard.

George Burgoyne interposed and prevented the destruction, saying, "I had rather go the bottom of the ocean than land in America, without my supplies and equipments." The storm soon passed, and the entire fleet arrived in safety at Quebec and Montreal. And in that march through southern Canada among a people loyal to King George III, the old gun went along in the front ranks, which were largely increased by a motley crowd of Tories and Indians. They crossed the Richelieu river, then around to the west shore of Lake Champlain, thence down past Plattsburg—which later was to become historic ground—then along under the shadows of the Adirondacks; but soon shadows of a different nature began to gather around them. The rebels were springing up all around them; their allies, the Tories and Indians, were deserting them. The army was suffering for food. General Baum sent to Bennington with his artillery to capture supplies stored there by the rebels; he returned with neither food or cannon.

The cannon given to New Salem was kept at New Salem hill for many years, and was used on all festive occasions; but sometimes they would find it missing when they went to bring it out to celebrate the glorious Fourth, but soon they would hear its sharp report in some distant part of the town. This state of affairs continued for many years, then came a time when the old gun was silent, and for twenty years nothing was heard of it, it had been buried under a heap of stones upon the farm now owned by Lester Ballard. It had been placed there by two men residents of New Salem hill; one of them went west, and, returning after an absence of twenty years, was surprised to learn that it was yet remaining where there had placed it.

It soon made its appearance, and was again used in various parts of the town.

On the Fourth of July, 1856, it assisted at the celebration at Millington; it was soon after carried again to New Salem hill, and on the afternoon of the 14th day of September it was lying upon the ground near the village school house.

The writer, then a school boy at New Salem Academy, had been for some time looking at it, and thinking that in the future he might have use for it, he arranged with some friends to carry it to a safe hiding place.

At midnight they went out; it was a balmy September evening, the moon in its decadence was just coming up over the Petersham hills, and the shadows of the Academy building, extended far out upon the common; in the south and west was a tissue of fine fleecy clouds. To the great astonishment of the writer and his friends the cannon was gone. They looked over the common, around the boarding house, among the graves in the ancient cemetery, around the churches and in many other places, but they did not find it. Since that September evening, nearly fifty years ago, naught has been heard of the old cannon. While great and momentous changes have been going on all over the world, the old gun has remained silent.

Is there any one living today who knows where it is?

We have always supposed it did not go far on that evening, and that today it is somewhere near New Salem hill.
